SANIDERM

Leave the wrap on for 72 hours minimum (3 days). If removed during that time frame, begin the conventional method with cleaning, applying ointment everytime after you wash it. If the bandage is left on for the full 96 hours, simply remove it, keep the tattoo clean, and use lotion as needed whenever the tattoo dries out fully.

The tattoo was cleaned properly before bandaging, so you don't need to clean it while the bandage is on. Saniderm allows the tattoo to breathe, but it is also a moisture barrier; as such, it is water resistant, but that also means that any excess ink, blood or plasma that seeps out of a new tattoo will be trapped inside. This is normal. If a pool of fluid does become trapped inside the bandage - not a quarter sized bubble, but half dollar or larger - you may use scissors to cut a small hole in the bandage to drain the fluid. After draining, RE-SEAL the Saniderm using a little piece of medical tape, if you need more you can purchase "Tegaderm" at Walgreens or CVS. In any case, use your best judgement.

If your bandage becomes torn, is leaking excessively, etc. please contact me at the studio so I can go over how to proceed - if you can't reach me in a timely manner for whatever reason, remove wrap and use the conventional healing method.

Do your best not to sweat excessively - work is fine, but avoid the gym while using Saniderm. It can be left on during the shower as well, but this does not mean you should submerge the tattoo in water for a prolonged period of time through a bath or swimming if you're one of a thousand person showing allergic reaction to the saniderm you'll see excessive redness around the film, in this case peel it off and do the conventional healing

Any time your tattoo is exposed to the sun after its done healing you should use a minimum of SPF 45 sunblock.
